Jack

Thank you for writing back. The artifacts all come from the same place, a dried up lake bed that over 15,000 years ago I believe was an outpost of the continent of Mu. I gathered all my information from studying the pieces themselves and shared with you some of my conclusions. I knew nothing about you or your great grandfather's work until earlier this week. So I emailed you right away thinking about the time period was close to this culture of Mu. Frankly I thought you would like to know. I just started reading "Lifting the veil" I also have been writing a book on this and thought you might be interested in writing the Forward or Introduction to my book. This way you could set the record straight from "get go" so to speak. I just thought I would give you the opportunity to say in first pages "this has nothing to do with my great grandfather's findings etc. etc." If you do write about this in a blog, please send me a link. By the way I graduated from the University of West Florida so I believe we have some common ground. Please comment on the above

Thank you for sending the information contained in the emails. While the pictures obviously show what many people believe to be aliens, I am curious as to the providence of the discoveries and how these are linked to the lost continent of Mu and my great-grandfather's theories. I would greatly appreciate any further information linking your discoveries with my great-grandfather's theories so I can finish up a blog posting to make the information available to the world.

Thank you for your time and attention,

Jack,

I thought I would send you more proof. This is me with my two helpers at the BioMed Expo and Alien Event seminar in Las Vegas September 15th. You can see the jade artifacts I had on display on my table. One I already showed you and the others I have attached some pictures for a closer look.

Lets talk if you want to know more,

Dr. Johnny
